

Hire An Aspergers Technology Genius. Hire a 222+ IQ Person That Can See The Future and Build The Next Big Thing!

Our HR firm provides Aspergers (Aspies) genius-level people for your next hire. These people use more of their brain, in more creative ways, than most people.

Marie Curie, Albert Einstein, and Mozart among them-also had Asperger Syndrome. Shakespeare, Jane Austen, Charles Darwin, Galileo, Pablo Picasso, Benjamin Franklin, Mark Zuckerberg, Steve Jobs, Margaret Mead and Aristotle had Asperger Syndrome. Bill Gates is on the list of famous Aspies because of his lack of social skills, inability to make eye contact and tendency to rock back and forth coupled with his obsession with technology. Diane Kennedy, an author and advocate for Asperger Syndrome, writes, “They are our visionaries, scientists, diplomats, inventors, chefs, artists, writers and musicians. They are the original thinkers and a driving force in our culture.”

Dr. Temple Grandin, an adult with autism who became a successful engineer, academic and speaker, believes that her disorder is an asset. She once famously called NASA a sheltered workshop for people with autism and Asperger Syndrome. She believes that people with autistic spectrum disorders are the great innovators, and “if the world was left to you socialites, nothing would get done and we would still be in caves poking sticks at each other.”

Aspies are thought to not be comfortable looking others in the eye because they can see the true nature of people and can pierce through pretexts, platitudes and affectations due to their uncanny ability to see and interpret nuances, micro-patterns and primal human directions. Aspies appear to avoid superficial public social standards because Aspies do not like the social fakery that the average person uses to get through each day. You can always count on an Aspie to say what-is-what and to distill a problem down to it's basic roots. This makes Aspies expert at creating solutions to any kind of problem.

Animals love Aspies because Aspies can see the subtle signs that animals use to communicate and express themselves. Animals and kids find Aspies to be unusually sensitive to interactions with them. There are a vast number of advantages to employing Aspergers-enhanced staff. The only issues are the eye contact thing and the overt directness Aspies are known for. Professional Aspergers adults do not have temper tantrums such as those seen on dramatic TV shows. They are rarely addicted to things. Their productivity is off-the-charts. They have extensive, and very dry, senses of humor. They can often comprehend every detail, contingency issue and option for a problem within minutes of hearing a description of the problem. We place a number of Aspie people at the CIA and NSA because they are the best analysts.

Most people end up appreciating the direct communication because the pandering communication of others is so much less productive. No matter the minimal peccadilloes, Aspergers experts always add an extra billion dollars to a company bottom line.
